Elaine Wynne is a free lance storyteller and Licensed Psychologist from Minneapolis. She has studied, performed and taught storytelling for over 20 years, around the United States, in Ecuador, Japan, Sweden, Norway, and Germany. She taught Storytelling and Folklore and Storytelling as a Modern Communication Art at Metropolitan State University and currently teaches an independent course, "The Healing Art of Storytelling". She was recently featured on NPR's "All Things Considered" telling a story. In the '70's she was a founding member of the Twin Cities Women's Film Collective and in the 80's did talks for ^{parents through} Minneapolis Children's Medical Center on "Developing Children's Imagination Through Storytelling" and "The Effects of Television on Children". Her work has always been community based and cross-cultural. She believes the stories we tell about ourselves deeply affect how we live our lives and that the greatest stories told today are by family and community members telling to their friends and beloveds. She and Larry Johnson are The Key of See Storytellers.
