George: I'm not sure how much I will be able to send to you. I was planning the major portion of this work for the summer months. I will try to get some very basic descriptive statistics for one of the sports (probably the football bowl games) but it won't be much more than the type of commercials during the games. I'm sorry I cannot do more but I'm overloaded right now -- I'm working with the copy editing of my book (which I must get off the first week in March) - once that is finished I have some time I can devote to this. But I've a major family event (and a time user) - David's Bar Mitzvah is at the beginning of May and I'm totally swamped with those preparations as well as the everyday obligations of teaching, committee work, etc.

Part of my problem is that the grad students I have had working are not permitted to do other work while they are teaching (a stipulation of their teaching assistantships). I've an undergrad doing some work but his time is somewhat limited. But, we'll do our best to get something to you asap.

By the way, please change my e-mail address: It should read
NANCYS@UDEL.EDU

Aside from being too busy for words, we're all doing well. David is having his first experience with work overload and seems to be handling it quite well. Our temple has a very extensive program for its students -- David must lead both Friday evening and Saturday morning services, plus prepare a talk--he gets to give the sermon! This on top of all his school work, math competitions, and being a kid!
